THE COLORADO STILL RAGES; MELTING SNOWS BRING FLOOD

(By B. F. Fly)

Yuma is to have no June overflow. The high water will be here in July instead. That's the latest official forecast from the Denver office.

By the 25th or 26th of June the river at Yuma will be carrying about 85,000 second-feet, which means just about double the amount the river is carrying at the present time, and from that date till the crest is reached the Colorado will be constantly rising until it reaches a gauge of something like 30 feet.

This is all caused by the unusual cold weather up on the headwaters, where it is known that there is now enough snow to predict the gauge indicated.

Nothing like the amount of water that has passed Yuma this year has ever before been recorded, but it has come so steadily all spring that thus far no damage has been done, save the big scare that was caused by the changing of the channel down at the Nigger-head bend. At this point over five hundred acres of wild lands outside of the levee system has been eaten away by the greedy old Colorado, and it continues to eat the banks as if they were so much sugar.

I made a trip down to the 18-mile post late yesterday afternoon on the rock train, in company with Project Manager Lawson and Superintendent of Construction Priest. At this particular point the bank has been eaten away for a width of over half a mile until now the full force of the current is directly against the newly rock-revetted levee for a distance of over a quarter of a mile, and the bank continues to sluff off at an alarming rate, though the Reclamation force has it well in hand and there seems absolutely no danger of the water breaking through the levee.

The caving part simply keeps on dropping down stream as the rock is dumped into the nasty-looking water against the levee. Unless the current takes a sudden turn within the next few days it will be pouring down through the upper end of Gadsden lake, though it is hardly possible that the river will be carried much closer to Gadsden than the old lake.

Two hundred cars of rock per day are being used to save the levee at this point. It is a great piece of work and will stand as a monument to the Reclamation officials for all time to come.

CRISIS DEMONSTRATES THAT MEXICO NEEDS A REAL LEADER

(By B. F. Fly)

The Mexican situation is becoming more acute with each passing day.

The truth is gradually coming to light, and that is that Carranza does not seem to possess the backbone to control his own advisers. It begins to look like it is every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost.

Just what Gen. Obregon is doing no one seems to know. For the past ten days or more his name has not been mentioned in any of the Mexican news.

Generals Trevino and Gavra are now constantly in the lime-light, with the former apparently bent on plunging his already distressed country in war with the United States—for what purpose it is hard to conceive, unless he is owned body and soul by Hearst and Otis of Los Angeles who have been clamoring for war so long that memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

It has been well known for several years that American money has been the mainstay of the disgruntled Mexicans. Without this money the trouble in Mexico would long since have been settled, and settled properly, but as long as disloyal Americans persist in sending money and ammunition to Mexico, for the sole purpose of eventually forcing intervention, just that long may we expect Mexico to remain a hot-bed of discontent.

What Mexico needs worse than anything else at the present time is a man of the stamp of Governor-General Esteban Cantu of Lower California. He has shown more statesmanship, more real leadership than all the balance of the men in Mexico combined. He has actually demonstrated that he knows how to govern his people with wisdom and kindness. He has shown himself to be a man capable of bringing order out of chaos, and it's a great pity he is not put at the head of the entire Republic of Mexico instead of being merely governor-General of Lower California. His is absolutely the only section in the Mexican Republic that has been at peace all during the five-year revolution. Not an act of depredation has been committed against an American in his territory. He runs his government strictly on the gold basis. Every man in his employ gets his day's wage when it is due. All his people are prosperous and contented. The balance of the Republic is in the hands of men who seem bent on war.

What a pity!
